The University Diploma (D.U.) GRATIANUS is a European interuniversity program. It is awarded by Université Paris-Sud, in collaboration with European universities, under Erasmus agreements.

Its goal is to train students in law, political science and religious rights from the Master level. GRATIANUS is also open in the second place to all those who, having the required university level, want to train or deepen their knowledge in the field of legal and institutional relations between States, Religions and individual or collective Freedoms. As such, it is aimed at professionals facing religious issues (legal professions, local government executives, journalists, ...).

Since its creation in 1991, about 300 auditors have followed the GRATIANUS program. More than a quarter of the participants have completed a doctoral thesis, engaged in research and pursue a university career in law, sociology of religion, political science, history of religions, internal laws of religion, theology or other human and social sciences.

The Center for Law & Religious Societies (DSR) supervises the program whose lectures are delivered in French and in English. Students, doctoral students and auditors benefit from conferences, seminars and international seminars organized by DSR. They also have access to Parisian university libraries and those of the Catholic Institute of Paris.
